

Muchos investigadores en historia, musicología y áreas relacionadas consideran la música como un ‘espejo’, aportando importantes conocimientos sobre desarrollos sociales, históricos y políticos con el paso de tiempo. Como Theodor Adorno (1931) ilustra, sin embargo, “desde la mitad del siglo XIX, la música de un país se ha convertido en una ideología política al destacar sus características nacionales”. Al mismo tiempo, la “música, más que cualquier otro medio artístico, también expresa las antinomias del principio nacional” (Ibid.). Así, la conferencia apunta a usar la música como una lente para explorar la (re)construcción de identidades en las Américas, enfocando particularmente en temas de transculturación, pos-colonialismo y migración. A este respecto, ¿cómo ha sido determinada la evolución de géneros musicales populares dentro de estructuras nacionales/nacionalistas y cómo fueron desafiados por las diásporas latinas y caribeñas? ¿Cuáles son los aspectos centrales de las políticas de identidad que han dado forma al progreso y la contestación de estas narrativas? ¿Cómo estas nociones han construido lugares, espacios e identidad? Este taller propone reunir perspectivas de disciplinas diferentes para discutir las varias nociones de Americanidad que han emergido de géneros musicales populares desde el siglo XIX hasta hoy.

Many scholars in history, musicology and related fields view music as a ‘mirror’, bearing important insights on social, historical and political developments over time. As Theodor Adorno (1931) illustrates, however, “since the mid-nineteenth century a country’s music has become a political ideology by stressing national characteristics”. At the same time, “music, more than any other artistic medium, expresses the national principle’s antinomies as well” (Ibid.). Thus, the conference aims to use music as a lens to explore the (re)construction of identities in the Americas, with a particular focus on the themes of transculturalism, postcolonialism and migration. In this respect, how has the development of popular music genres been located within national/ist frameworks, and how have the Latino/a and Caribbean diasporas of the Americas challenged such notions? What are the central aspects of identity politics that have shaped the development and contestation of dominant narratives in this regard? How have these notions shaped place, space and identity? The workshop will bring together perspectives from different disciplines to investigate the various notions of Americanness that have emerged from popular music genres from the 19th century until today.
